As we celebrate 10 years of the Health Insurance Literacy Initiative, studies continue to reinforce the importance of our work. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) suggests 43 million Americans have medical debt on their credit reports that total $88 billion in a recently released statement.

This debt is often related to unexpected and emergency events. Consumers are often unaware of prices related to services in these situations. Having insurance and understanding what is covered with your health insurance are important factors to reduce confusion and increase capability.

Once consumers use credit cards to pay for medical services, this can impact one’s credit report. The credit report can have significant impact on family finances. The credit report is used to determine if one qualifies for additional credit and could potentially impact loan interest rates. The amount of debt can also influence one’s ability to get a loan for other purchases such as automobiles and houses.

Medical debt impacts households unevenly. The report indicates that Black (28%) and Hispanic (22%) populations hold over 50% of past-due medical debt.

Program Delivery

For the first six months of the year, the HILI team continued to offer webinars for our local partners and sessions that attracted participants from multiple states. In total there were 16 webinars reaching 263 participants. Information about the educational modules we provide is available at https://extension.umd.edu/insure.

Consumer Education

The HILI team offered a series of webinars in the spring focusing on the use of health insurance. Dorothy Nuckols and Lisa McCoy presented Smart Actions for Mental Health and Smart Use Smart Actions. Michael Bievenour and Maria Pippidis presented Understanding and Estimating Health Care Costs. Carrie Sorenson and Jesse Ketterman presented Healthcare in Your Senior Years and Maria Pippidis and Jesse Ketterman facilitated Health Insurance Options for Farmers and Small Businesses.

Jesse Ketterman, Carrie Sorenson, and Tahi Tabassum, our student intern for the spring, wrote and posted two blog articles on the Family and Consumer Sciences, Breathing Room blog site.
Carrie Sorenson, Jesse Kettermann, and Lisa McCoy were invited by DC Health Connect to present as part of their District of Pride: Virtual Town Hall, Navigating Health Insurance. The webinars were geared toward the LGBTQ+ audience in partnership with the District of Columbia Mayor’s Office.
